

The Interdisciplinary Ethnography Workshop: Blurring the Boundaries of Practice

A yearlong series organized by students in the Religion, Sociology, and Anthropology departments to spark interdisciplinary conversation about ethnography and to demonstrate the diversity of the field by considering how ethnographic research can be paired with archival and historical work, performance studies, gender studies, religious studies, and media studies, among others. The series will include both faculty presentations, master classes, and graduate student works in progress. For more information, please contact co-organizers Joanne Golann (jgolann@princeton.edu) or Alyssa Maldonado (alyssam@princeton.edu).

Master Class

"Navigating the Institutional Review Board" Rena Lederman, Princeton University

Tuesday, October 7 at 5:30pm in the Religion Department Lounge, 1879 Hall, Room 140.*
A light dinner will be served.

Please bring your IRB questions and send them in advance to Rena Lederman at lederman@princeton.edu.

Please RSVP to PrincetonEthnography@gmail.com by Friday, October 3 for dinner.

*enter 1879 Hall through doors 4-6.

Upcoming events

Tuesday, October 21, 5:30 pm: Linger in the Field with Carol Stack and Patricia Fernandez-Kelly

Tuesday, November 4, 5:30 pm: Using Historical Methods in Ethnography with Neni Panourgia

Tuesday, November 11, 5:30 pm: Master Class on Writing Fieldnotes with Roger Sanjek

We are grateful for funding from our generous sponsors:

Sociology Department
Anthropology Department
University Center for Human Values
Princeton-Mellon Initiative in Architecture, Urbanism, and the Humanities Program in American Studies
Religion Department
Center for the Study of Religion